The Spark, which provides an open forum for students, faculty, subscribers and community members, encourages letters to the editor. Letters can be sent to the publication at the address on the following page, dropped off in the journalism classroom (room 118), or posted as comments on our online stories and tweets/comments to our social media

“Proud to be a Hawk”

I have never been more proud to call myself a Lakota East Thunderhawk; the support and spirit the students have shown for Amelia Murphy and spina bifida is awe-inspiring. It is common for a high school to become close knit when tragedy strikes. We rely on each other for support and strength, but this is something different. When was the last time a high school made the evening news for doing something beneficial in society? Channel 9 WCPO aired a segment on its daily news Feb. 12, 2013 to show the love and dedication the East Thunderhawks have to raise money and awareness for Amelia Alit ab ipsam, serorro rrovit aboraes necepeliciis dias acipides magnihi cipient aciistrum sit volupta tusam, unturi od quodiant.

“Easy Access to Information Cannot Compete with Print”

As newspapers follow society and its technology into the 21st century, the way we publish our information is constantly evolving. Beginning with the handwritten books scribed by monks, revolutionized by Gutenberg and then once again changed by the Internet, the way we receive news is constantly evolving.

Newspapers around the globe are merging their online publications with their print issues.

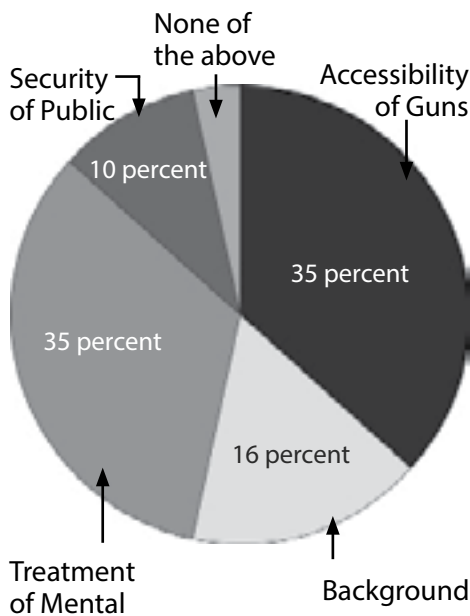

QR codes are used to link print pages directly to website pages, magazines publish exclusively online, and readers buy E-readers. Although this technology revolution is making it easier for readers to find their information quickly and in an accessible format, there is still nothing that can match the feel of paper and ink.

E-readers, iPhones and tablets users are looking more frequently to the Internet for their news. Applications such as Flipboard attempt to curate a daily “magazine” personalized to

Jordan Granda’s “Keep Mentioning Newtown”

I definitely agree—it was a big deal and it’s hard to imagine life just going on normally afterward. It’s extremely important to continue talking about it. Online, though, it seems that talk has not even slowed. At least people are not dropping the matter completely. I also noticed you mentioned the use of an assault rifle. I have heard everything under the sun about what kind of gun was used—that he had two handguns, that he had four handguns, that he had an assault rifle, that the assault rifle was actually just in the car, that there wasn’t one at all... the list goes on. I just wanted to note that it’s still a little hard to say what happened. Unfortunately the people reporting to the public did not take journalism at Lakota East, or maybe they’d know to check their facts and everyone’s discussions would be more productive.
